Das Erwachsenwerden: Coming of age through the ages

German 201, Fall 2014

Instructor xxx

Course Description
Moving beyond the focus on personal identity emphasized in German 101-102, German 201 at Emory is the first of the two-course sequence (201-202) that explores how various societal factors have affected German-speaking youths’ coming of age in different time periods in the German-speaking world and draws comparisons with comings of age in English language cultures. Within this overarching thematic focus on coming of age, the course examines three sub-themes as they pertain to coming of age:
- Family (conformity to or rebellion against family order)
- Nature (nature as a hindrance or ally for maturation)
- Travel (gaining self-knowledge through travel)

Through this focus on coming of age at different moments in German cultural history, you will build on the foundation established in first-year German and develop further your abilities as readers, writers, and speakers of German. You will use theme-based readings and a grammar review textbook to acquire the language necessary to communicate meaningfully about the topic of coming of age. One of the criteria for choosing the sub-themes for 201-202 was to achieve some overlap with the topics discussed in 101-102. By revisiting some of the same themes, albeit from a different perspective and with a different focus, you should be able to find some familiar ground for developing your language abilities further.

In terms of your long-term language development, German 201 is the first course of Level 2 in the Department of German Studies’ integrated four-year, content-oriented undergraduate curriculum. As such, the course will continue the focus on story telling that was emphasized in Level 1 but it will look to expand on that ability by working with you to not only tell stories, but also compare, contrast, and explain the events in those stories. In addition, your narratives will consist of more detailed and sophisticated information that becomes linguistically possible through your command of a wider array of lexico-grammatical features. The department has spent the past few years working collaboratively on revising the curriculum to support students’ language development, and the faculty were delighted that the American Association of Teachers of German recognized these efforts by designating the department as one of only two collegiate Centers of Excellence nationwide.

One additional component of the course is a yearlong focus on sustainability within the larger topic of coming of age. Specifically, you will examine what it means to be sustainable in terms of each subtheme of the course (e.g., family, nature, travel).

Prerequisite: Completion of one year of college-level German or placement via the German Studies Department’s online placement exam (http://german.emory.edu/placement/index.html)

Course Materials:
- Supplemental texts for each thematic unit available on Blackboard and/or to be distributed by your instructor

Approach:
As the title of the course indicates, “Das Erwachsenwerden,” there is a specific thematic focus that runs throughout the two-course sequence (201 & 202), namely, an exploration of how different societal factors affect young adults’ coming of age. By focusing on an overarching topic for an entire course, German 201-202 reflects the teaching philosophy of the Department of German Studies that language is best acquired when learners have to explore a particular content area and to communicate meaningfully about it. In this content-based approach, rather than studying the language as an end unto itself, you will focus on those language features that are necessary to discuss and explore the content in a meaningful way. This is not to say that we will not study the traditional building blocks of language, namely, grammar and vocabulary. In fact, you will probably see right away that much of what you do for the class resembles how you might imagine a typical foreign language course; that is, you will read texts, learn relevant vocabulary, study grammatical structures that appear in the texts, complete exercises for homework on the grammar and vocabulary, interact with classmates and the instructor on specific topics, and complete writing assignments. What all these activities have in common is that they aim to familiarize yourself with the language and the content that you will need to communicate meaningfully about the topic at hand.

Also in line with the general pedagogical approach in the German Studies Department, the primary medium for delivering the content and modeling targeted language features in this course will be texts. As such, significant class time will be spent working with texts, understanding how they work, and approaching them as helpful resources for your own language use. Specifically, at this level of language learning the main text type or genre that you will encounter will be the personal narrative or story. There are many types of narratives (e.g., fairy tales, historical narratives, adventure stories), and we will examine together what constitutes an effective narrative so that you can develop your ability to narrate about a range of topics. There will be sufficient support to help you in this process, but there is also the long-term goal of gradually developing your ability to become an independent reader, learner, and user of German.

Finally, we feel it is important to let you know that second-year German will feel different from first-year German. Whereas last year there was a fairly steep learning curve as you were exposed to new material almost every class day, this year is about expanding your ability to narrate in more sophisticated and complex ways. Thus, there will not necessarily be a new grammatical topic presented every day, but you will work consistently and systematically at building upon your foundation from last year to develop your repertoire for telling stories. Initially, you will focus on narrating events but gradually you will also work on explaining the factors and consequences of those events. In other words, you will make wonderful progress this year, but the progress might not always be visible to you on a daily basis. Throughout this process you will be reminded often that learning a language is a long-term, non-linear, and error-full process. You will make mistakes and even possibly get frustrated by your mistakes or seemingly slow progress, but that is completely normal. In fact, your errors are what indicate to both of us where we need to focus more attention and how your abilities are developing. You will be expected this year to analyze your errors and to study your instructor’s feedback in order to develop a greater awareness of your strengths and weaknesses in the language so that you can take steps to address them over time. As you examine your own language production this year, you also might find that some aspects of the language that you thought you understood or had a firm grasp on are now causing your trouble. That, too, is completely normal. There is only so much that your brain can handle at a given point, and it is typical that new material takes up cognitive resources that you had used earlier for some other component of the language.

As you embark on this exciting and challenging process, you will be expected to use German for all communication in class. It is hoped that you will approach our three weekly meetings as an opportunity to immerse yourself in German and push yourself as a learner of the language.
Assessment:

1. Participation (20%). Attendance and participation are essential to your progress. You will be allowed a maximum of 3 absences for routine doctor visits and travel for non-emergencies, etc., during the semester without penalty. Beginning with the 4th absence, a penalty of -1% will be levied on the earned final grade for each class missed. The best policy to adopt is to keep your instructor informed if you miss any classes or assignments. Extended illnesses and family emergencies will be treated as exceptions, and absences for these purposes will be excused. Be prepared to show proof of the need for the absences, however, if your instructor asks for it. Note that you can make up for one absence by participating in a fourth extra-curricular event of the department (guest-lectures, parties in the German House, film etc.) or by attending one of the weekly Deutsches Mittagessen. Varsity athletes can get excused with coaches’ notification of announced absences but must, of course, do the required work.

Part of your participation grade is based on your attending at least three extra-curricular events (such as films, parties, guest lectures, etc.) each semester. There is a great amount of flexibility as to what counts as an appropriate activity because we want you to seek out those aspects of the German-speaking culture that interest you. For each event, please submit a brief summary of the event and your reactions to it to your instructor in as much German as possible (50-75 words). To avoid waiting until the end of the semester to complete this course requirement, you are asked to attend one event during each instructional unit.

Class Participation Criteria:

| F     | makes no contribution to class whatsoever |

2. Preparation (25%). Completing homework thoroughly, regularly, and on time is extremely important. Learning a foreign language is long-term process, and cramming simply does not work. All Arbeitsblätter (AB) must be completed and brought to class, but only those marked with an asterisk (*) need to be turned in for a grade. They will be graded according to the following criteria:
- “√+” (100%): Homework handed in on time and indicating a very thorough effort, including a conscious attempt to use language features emphasized in class;
- “√” (85%): Homework handed in on time and indicating a satisfactory effort;
- “√-” (65%): Homework handed in on time but indicating an unsatisfactory effort.

Note: Homework that receives a check or check minus can be corrected, turned back in, and, assuming the issues have been addressed, receive a mark of 90%. Late homework will not be accepted and will receive no credit.

Regular homework assignments could consist any of the following activities: (re)reading an assigned text, reading a grammar explanation in the textbook, learning vocabulary, completing a worksheet or grammar exercise, writing an essay, or preparing for an in-class speaking event.

In addition, there will be one vocabulary quiz per instructional unit and periodic take-home quizzes on specific grammar.

3. Writing assignments (30%). At the end of each of the three units you will complete a writing assignment on a topic relevant to the unit. Submit your writing as a hard copy to your instructor. The first draft will be annotated and returned for revision.

4. Speaking events (15%). There will be formally assessed speaking events based on the material covered in class at the end of the first two thematic units.

5. Final exam (10%). The final exam for languages is scheduled for Friday, December 13th, from 11:30 to 2:00pm. Please do not plan on leaving for winter break until after this date.

Overview of semester:

Academic Support
There is a range of resources available to Emory undergraduates designed to enrich each student’s educational experience.

- Visit http://college.emory.edu/advising for a list of support programs and appointment directions

Access and Disability Resources
Students with medical/health conditions that might impact academic success should visit Access, Disability Services and Resources (ADSR formerly the Office of Disability Services, ODS) to determine eligibility for appropriate accommodations. Students who receive accommodations must present the Accommodation Letter from ADSR to your professor at the beginning of the semester, or when the letter is received.

Attendance Policies (Absences and Absences from Examinations)

- Absences: Although students incur no administrative penalties for a reasonable number of absences from class or laboratory, they should understand that they are responsible for the academic consequences of absence and that instructors may set specific policies about absence for individual courses.

- Absences from Examinations: A student who fails to take any required midterm or final examination at the scheduled time may not make up the examination without written permission from a dean in the Office for Undergraduate Education. Permission will be granted only for illness or other compelling reasons, such as participation in scheduled events off-campus as an official representative of the University. A student who takes any part of a final examination ordinarily will not be allowed to defer or retake that final. Deferred examinations must be taken during the student’s next semester of residence by the last date for deferred examinations in the academic calendar or within twelve months if the student does not re-enroll in the college. Failure to take a deferred examination by the appropriate deadline will result automatically in the grade IF or IU.

Honor Code
Upon every individual who is a part of Emory University falls the responsibility for maintaining in the life of Emory a standard of unimpeachable honor in all academic work. The Honor Code of Emory College is based on the fundamental assumption that every loyal person of the University not only will conduct his or her own life according to the dictates of the highest honor, but will also refuse to tolerate in others action which would sully the good name of the institution. Academic misconduct is an offense generally defined as any action or inaction which is offensive to the integrity and honesty of the members of the academic community.
